"Acts and the New Testament Letters"

While most believers enjoy reading the New testament epistles for their practical nature, we don't think of how they connect with the timeline in the book of Acts. While they follow Acts in book order many of them were actually written during the time frame recorded in the book of Acts. How does that help us understand these letters better?

In trying to understanding the prophets it's important to see how they all revolved around key historical (or better theological) events – namely the Assyrian & Babylonian attacks, destruction of Jerusalem and return from exile in the 8th and 7th centuries. In the book of Acts we shouldn't be surprised that there are some key historical/theological movements that we can build a 'frame' around. These are:
